In one of the scenes of "Superba," at the Park Theater, a clown attaches one end of in his mouth. The gas inflates his stomach until he assumes the shape of a balloon. One of the clown's friends strikes a match and holds it to his lips, a long flame darts out and the clown leaves the stage reduced to his natural size. This trick has excited the audiences to roars of laughter.

In honor of the funeral of the President, the manager of English's Opera House, Ad F. Miller, and the manager of the company playing "Are You a Mason?" at that theater this week. Charles H. Greene, have decided not to give a performance to-night. At every performance so far the theater has been filled, and to make up for its being closed to-night a special matinee will be given to-morrow afternoon. A matinee will be given Saturday, also.

The Metropolitan Opera House, in New York, is now being occupied by a very large company in a new musical comedy called "The Ladies' Paradise," which is of the same style as "The Rounders." The great size of the theater has made a big chorus necessary and the solos are backed by a hundred voices. Richard Carle, Queenie Vassar and Templar Saxe have the principal parts. Mr. Saxe is an English actor with whom this country's theater-goers are known for their quiet respectability and not acquainted. The venture is that of Al- their generosity. Louis Mann and Clara Lipman have begun their season in "The Red Klocf," written for them by Paul Potter. Kloof means ravine. Mr. Mann's part is that of an old Boer, Piet Prinsloo. This actor has long been playing German caricature parts with success and now he is attempting legitimate Boer impersonation. Of course, the idea of the play was suggested by the Boer-British war. However artistic the production may be, it will not be the first Boer-British drama to reach this city, for the first three days of next week at the Park Theater, "The Outpost," a melodrama on the subject, will be presented by J. K. Emmett and Lotie Gilson. Mr. Emmett, who is a son of the late "Fritz" Emmett, has tried German comedy along a different line from Mr. Mann's, and he, too, has taken the oportunity to portray Boer character.

The climax of great demonstrations of sorrow that had been observed all the way from Pittsburg began at Alliance, eighteen miles from Canton. There the haif-masted flags were bordered with black, and it seemed as if every man, woman and child was at the station. A big white streamer, ten feet wide, was across the main street Lettered heavily upon it were in black, "We Mourn Our Nation's Dead." Church bells were tolling dolorously. Then came the last half-hour's run into Canton, where the body was to be recived into the arms proach was marked by growing manifestations of deep personal affliction. Flags that had often waived McKinley welcome were now lowered in sorrow. Farmers and country folk generally seemed to have suspended work altogether; the schools were dismissed and the entire population were lence. The straining faces showed that the people took this mournful home-coming as a personal bereavement, which had entered into each home, and it was as though fathers, mothers and sisters were watching for a glimpse of the casket that held their own loved one. At Maximo the country stores were heavfly draped and the townspeople packed the little station. Now the train was at Lewisville, only six miles from Canton, and soon the shops of the dead President's muchloved city were dotted along the way. For the first time the sun which had been behind heavy black clouds threw its rays on the gathered throngs and lighted up the sombre emblems of grief, and the entry

Major McKinley-it was a few months before his first nomination-preficers were elected as follows: Secretary, When he finished there was much applause back their chairs and started for the doors. I did the best I could, omitting a good deal of what I meant to say, and bringing up my climax with a sharp turn. "Well, just as soon as the guests arose from the table the major met me with outstretched hand, and told me how thoroughly he appreciated the handicap from which I suffered as the tail-ender of a long programme, and added that I should philo-sophically remember that it was a position that somebody had to fill, and he was quite sure that I had brought up the rear with in the right direction.
